Affinity groups are vital to the success of people with minoritized identities by providing safe spaces that consist of people who share an identity. Within the safe space of affinity groups, members are able to de-shackle from the social pressures of representing a whole community and discuss shared joys and challenges. Yet, if belonging and inclusion are the goals, how do safe spaces and affinity groups work toward or against that goal? What are affinity groups and safe spaces anyway? Finally, what purpose do they serve in educational environments? Join us for April's Collective Learning Series on Safe Spaces, where we will explore what role safe spaces and affinity groups play in creating belonging and inclusion.
