

SOCIAL SKILLS GROUPS

WHO CAN BENEFIT?

Anyone who has been diagnosed with a communication disorder that affects their ability to navigate social interactions.

Are you not sure if your child or family member would benefit? Call to get more information about an initial assessment.

Groups are kept small for maximum benefit and are divided by age/grade and/or developmental level.

Available in the Sheila C. Johnson Center at the University of Virginia

Our group therapy services teach children and adolescents skills that facilitate successful peer interactions.

Services include:

- An engaging, 50-minute group session per week
- Learning to work collaboratively and play as a group
- Group interactions focused on perspective taking, and reading social cues
- Problem solving and building appropriate self-advocacy skills
- Improving conversation skills, staying on topic and ending interactions appropriately
- Treatment goals are tailored to meet individual needs and family priorities
